

YELLOW FEVER VICTIM ARRIVES HERE FOR BURIAL

Panama Steamer Has a Thrilling Bout with "Norther" at Colon.

The steamship Advance, of the Panama Line, reached port to-day after a thrilling experience in the harbor of Colon. She carried fifty-three passengers in her cabins and two bodies in her hold. One of the caskets held the body of W. W. Haverstick, of Lancaster, Pa., who died of yellow fever eight months ago and was buried in the outskirts of Panama.

Haverstick was an engineer on the canal. His relatives had his body exhumed and shipped North. The other casket held the body of W. R. Dodd, who recently died in the Government hospital at Panama from the effects of an operation for appendicitis.

"As the casket containing the body of the yellow fever victim was hermetically sealed," said Dr. A. H. Doty, Health Officer of the Port, "there is absolutely no danger of contagion. The circumstance of bringing home such a body is unusual but it is not without precedent."

The Advance was scheduled to leave Colon for New York on Dec. 24, but at noon on that day, before the passengers had come aboard and all of the cargo had been secured Capt. Hammond sighted a "norther," one of the most dreaded of West Indian storms, heading in from the sea toward the harbor. Colon harbor faces the north, so there was but twelve minutes lost by the skipper of the Advance in getting up steam and trying to the open sea in the teeth of the gale.

Other ships in the harbor also hauled their anchors and followed the Advance out.

"It was the worse 'norther' I ever experienced," said Capt. Hammond. "We laid out six of Colon for four days, finally making Torto Illo. Upon our return to Colon we took up our passengers who had been stranded on the island and the remaining crew and got away for New York."

The crew of the Advance are at the option of the shipping lines of the Torto Illo line now four days overdue, has been detained in the West Indies by the same storm.

MAID SAYS SHE WAS ROBBED IN STREET

Two Negroes First Chloro-formed Her, Asserts Eliza Dean, of Brooklyn.

Brooklyn detectives are looking up what Eliza Dean says happened to her yesterday afternoon. Eliza is a maid employed by Mrs. W. H. McCutcheon, wife of a dentist at No. 44 Vanderbilt avenue. This is what happened to Eliza she says:

Two negroes approached her on a public street in broad daylight in a populous part of the borough.

Chloroformed her.

Waved a big knife in front of her.

Robbed her of $40.

With some orientation, it appears, Eliza counted her money before she left the McCutcheon home early yesterday afternoon, announcing that she was going to the Brooklyn Savings Bank. She put the roll of $40 in a small wallet which she deposited in the bottom of her waist.

At Adelphi and Fulton streets, while Eliza was walking a couple of hours, she approached her. One was tall and was shy a front tooth. The other was short and stout. They asked her to direct her to the bank, giving the name of which she does not remember.

She was frightened and walked away from them instead of going into a store or running home. The two negroes turned into Clermont avenue, residence thoroughfare. The negroes

One held a bottle to her face, the other poked a knife before her eyes and both unbuttoned her coat and waist and extracted the wallet and its contents.

Eliza got to the home of her mistress about three hours later, considerably shaken. Her maid was the informer that chased her. Mrs. McCutcheon reported the case to the Da Kuhn Avenue station.

MAGISTRATE LETS BLACKSMITH OFF

FREE A DAY, GOES BACK TO ISLAND

Brawny Workman Tells in Court a Pitiful Story of Hard Luck.

McCarthy Had $40, but He induced Matron to Buy Him Clothes.

"There never, Judge, my wife had nothing to eat and when this man charged me my last cent I lost my temper," said Daniel Otto, a rugged blacksmith, to Magistrate Mess in Essex Market Court to-day. "I haven't any money to pay a fine, and if you send me to jail my wife will be turned out on the streets."

For nearly a month, Otto, of the Union Market Station, arrested Otto for breaking a show case in the restaurant of Samuel Bisch, No. 44 Clinton street. The blacksmith said he was on his way to work at No. 354 South street and asked the restaurant man the price of two eggs and was told "ten cents."

Supposing that the amount of the eggs included also bread and butter, Otto was surprised when seventeen cents was demanded after he had finished the meal.

McCarthy gave a thousand thanks and promised the matron he would at once go to his wife, Elizabeth, at No. 44 West Thirty-first street. On the way, however, he dropped in at many saloons. This took time and it was 4 o'clock this morning when he knocked at his wife's door and asked for admittance.

Miss McCarthy realized his condition and told him to stay outside. After an attempt to kick down the door McCarthy went to sleep on the steps where he was found by the police.

In court to-day Mrs. McCarthy appeared as complainant. The matron looked coldly at McCarthy. He was the most cheerful person there. After the magistrate granted the six months sentence he turned at the condemned and said:

"You didn't go fishing did you?" With this he pulled off a small muslin bag and handed over a cord about his neck. It was the sort known as a "piggy bag," and he had had it all the time," said McCarthy. "I just got a new suit and overcoat free in one day. Now I can go back to the Island till summer."

"And," he continued, "when I handed this man my last penny he kept the 2 cents and refused to give me the 3 cents change. There was my wife without food and me to work all day without lunch to keep up my strength."

Magistrate Mess tore up the commitment paper after he had fined Otto $10 and told him to stand aside for a moment. Otto was soon found to have obtained his suit to-day and expected to draw some money and take it home to his wife to-night. His fine was remitted and his release ordered.

She was frightened and walked away from them instead of going into a store or running home. The two negroes turned into Clermont avenue, residence thoroughfare. The negroes

One held a bottle to her face, the other poked a knife before her eyes and both unbuttoned her coat and waist and extracted the wallet and its contents.

Eliza got to the home of her mistress about three hours later, considerably shaken. Her maid was the informer that chased her. Mrs. McCutcheon reported the case to the Da Kuhn Avenue station.

GEN. BELL BACK, SAYS CUBA IS PEACEFUL.

Some Malcontents on Island, but Great Majority of People at Work.

—Magoon in Favor.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Major-General J. Franklin Bell returned to Washington to-day from Cuba, where for the past several months he has been in command of the army of pacification. He will at once resume his duties as chief of staff. One of the first matters which he will take up with Secretary Taft is the appointment of a Brigadier-General to fill the vacancy created by his own promotion.

Gen. Bell states that he left matters in Cuba in an eminently satisfactory condition. In company with Gen. Wint, to whom he relinquished military command of the American forces in Cuba last Monday, Gen. Bell made a complete tour of the island of Cuba, and says that everywhere he found the natives in order and that while there were a few uncooperative and dissatisfied men in some of the provinces, they numbered less than usual.

Gov. Magoon, who has already returned to Cuba and the administration is decidedly popular.

Gen. Bell was accompanied to Washington by Andrew M. Christie, a brigadier-general, who came here to be treated at the Soldiers' Home Hospital for a wound in the leg which he had in the war for independence, and which has so far refused to heal.

Edgar is dangerously wounded. No cause is known for the shooting as the two were alone at the time of the duel.

PARTED HIS HAIR IN AN AWFUL WAY

New England Man Begins Suit to Establish Claim to Four Blocks of Chicago Property.

(See story to the Evening World.)

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 4.—The village of Collingwood near here was stirred early to-day by pistol shots in a battle between Town Marshal Wilson and two negroes.

The men had a wagon and were surprised by Wilson while carrying off a load of plunder from the railroad station.

One of the men escaped, but Joseph Cavell of Camden, who was up after bats had made a hole in his coat and hat.

He was shot in the head and was taken to the hospital.

Among the defendants are many women unused to the forms of law, and there are included many persons who have no claim to the title to all the land between the Thirtieth street on the north to Thirty-third street on the south, and the Grand Boulevard on the east to a line running north from Cottage Grove avenue and Thirtieth street on the east.

That the way he wore his hair caused a sudden parting of their ways was approximately $4,000.
